Critic's Corner

My great step grandfather's half-brother lost a pallet in the war so this one hit close to home. The action is rivaled only by the cinematography. I'm not even sure what cinematography is but everything was really pretty. McGrath leads a cast of the most talented sales team the industrial film world has ever seen... and they're not hard on the eyes either.

Critic's Corner

First, Mark Shaw had a case of Aqua Bags in one hand and I was like, "Whoa!" and then he put them in water and one bag weighed like, FORTY pounds, and I was like "WHOA!". My mind was totally blown man. Oh, the movie was pretty good too.

Critic's Corner

I've had my share of girl's weekends get ruined by dead people so I could definitely relate to this one. Great performance by the entire cast but Sonja Day completely stole the show. And I'm not just saying that because she's my boss.

Critic's Corner

I'm going to need everyone to sit down and look up here... I'll wait. This movie was full of gratuitous chemical spill scenes and fart jokes. While I can appreciate the educational aspect of the spills, I have no patience when it comes to flatulence. Also, it would've been nice to see more from the Bladder Systems.

Critic's Corner

A movie that is ahead of its time. Spill response and overpacking, subjects that were once rarely spoken of, are explored in a most provocative way. My Pa always told me, "A man's only as good as the salvage drum he uses for hazardous material transport." And after seeing this movie, I finally understand what he meant.

What a movie! I was on the edge of my seat the whole time! Jacque's portrayal of Wonder Woman was inspiring and I may have to trade in my mask for a lasso. Who would've guessed that a bunch of engineering nerds could be so badass??! By the way, I'm Batman.

Protecting the universe with Post Protectors seems a bit far fetched but then again, it's just a calendar. Their black suits were awful. They would've looked so much better in pastels... like our marketing guys wear.

Critic's Corner

This movie is silly, juvenile and at times, totally moronic. That's probably why I LOVED it! But the underlying theme of spill response and keeping our drains safe really tugged at my heart strings.

Critic's Corner

Matt Clancy is a walking contradiction. Part conservative engineer, part rocker with an affinity for 80s hair bands. But it all worked well onscreen, especially with those products. I loved those Filter Socks! Well, except for the heavy metal removal model... see what I did there?

Critic's Corner
 What a movie! I was on the edge of my seat the whole time! Jacque's portrayal of Wonder Woman was inspiring and I may have to trade in my mask for a lasso. Who would've guessed that bunch of engineering nerds could be so badass?! By the way, Tim Batman.
